 Prelude
 The Solitary on the city square
 Oft mixes with the crowds that hustle there,
 His hands tucked in his pockets, and his dreams
 Adrift on the breast of the living streams,
 With phantom shapes or spectral shades beside -
 The only friends in whom he may confide.
 Alone within the midst of crowds he broods
 Like a recluse among secluded woods;
 Alone he muses on the busy square,
 With aimless feet, and heart relieved of care;
 Or scrutinizes oft the passer-by,
 Reading the heart and fathoming the eye,
 As through the city's narrow streets or wide
 He strolls with friendly Loneliness as guide,
 Or sometimes mid the peace of rural scenes,
 With chin in hand, on a green bank he leans
 Beside a babbling brook, that aimless flows
 Through valley woods and fields from mountain snows -
 There listens to the music of the stream,
 And hears the leaves a-whispering a dream.
 And now, on through the pages of a book
 He strolls and sings; so, reader, if you look
 Within...
